

Understanding the app.

StreetEats is a live map of street food. Customers open it and see who's trading right now — your pin does the talking. Here's everything it can do.

One big button

Your Dashboard is built around a single status toggle. Go Live when you open, Closed when you're done — your pin on the public map updates in real time. The pin colour tells customers everything:

Live now

You're open and trading, at that exact spot

Scheduled today

Set automatically on days you have a scheduled appearance

Closed

Not trading — your pin rests at your default location

Green is only ever yours. The app can turn a pin amber or red on your behalf, but it never says you're open — only your tap does that. That's the promise customers learn to trust.

Going Live

Tap Live and the app drops your green pin at your phone's location. That's usually perfect — but not at your pitch, or GPS being fussy? Move the pin by hand:

MOVE MY PIN

- 1 On the Dashboard, tap Move my pin.
- 2 Drag the map until the pin sits exactly where you're trading (or tap Jump to my GPS to start from where you are).
- 3 Tap confirm — your pin moves instantly, and your status stays as it was.

Schedule your week

My schedule → + Add appearance — pick the date, name the spot (“Brighton, Madeira Drive”), set your hours, and optionally place a pin on the map. On the day, the app flips you to amber automatically and moves your pin to that appearance — so regulars see where you’ll be later. Notes on an appearance are private to you — customers never see them.

FORGOT TO TOGGLE OFF? WE’VE GOT YOU

Still showing Live (or amber) about 30 minutes after your scheduled end time? The app closes you automatically and rests your pin at your default location — so customers never chase a green pin to a packed-up van. Trading later than planned? Tap Live again after your end time and you’ll stay on the map until you close. Nothing scheduled? Then we never guess — the toggle is always yours.

When your pin changes by itself

Three things happen without you lifting a finger — all of them on your side:

- Just after midnight on a day you have scheduled an appearance, your red pin turns amber and moves to that appearance’s spot if you’ve set the pin.
- About 30 minutes after your last end time, a forgotten green or amber pin turns red and heads back to your default location.
- After two quiet weeks (no updates at all), your pin fades to grey until your next visit — one tap of the toggle brings you straight back.

Everything else — going green, closing early, moving the pin — only happens when you do it. The next page shows how this plays out on real days.

Three different scenarios

The Saturday market

00:05

09:55

The forgotten toggle

SCHEDULED 10:00 – 15:00 · YOU PACK UP AND DRIVE OFF

15:00

You pack up — and forget the toggle. Still green...

~15:30

The surprise pop-up

NOTHING SCHEDULED · YOU JUST ROCK UP

15:20

New pitch, no plan — you tap Live

All evening

No schedule, so the app never guesses — you stay green

21:45

Last serve done — you tap Closed

Settings, explained

Business info	Your name, category and description — the description is the “About” customers read on your profile.
